JEWS AND CULTURE

RABBI MAURICE N. EISENDRATH

Among the many interesting and suggestive letters which we have received in response to the questionnaire on "What Shall I Preach About?" which was submitted last Spring to the Sunday morning congregation at Holy Blossom Synagogue, we came across the following caustic, but truthful, indictment of Toronto Jewry (although we presume it might have been thus localized) Jewry:

"The Jew prides himself", reads this letter from an intelligent and truly cultured Jewish gentleman on being invited, but does he support with his name to musical enterprises of merit? How many Jewish names does one find on the subscriber's list of the Toronto Symphony Concerts, or the Hart House String Quartette? Practically none! Are they proud of Jewish achievements in the arts? No! Why shouldn't a representative showing be made at these events? Toronto's gentile "400" always sees the advisability of adding its names and support to all art movements, whether they are sincerely interested or just think that it is the thing to do. Look at our splendid Art Gallery and the excellent opportunity it offers to the Jews as well as to others. How many of our so-called "leading Jews" can talk on or appreciate the various styles of painting? It is all such an inexpensive privilege that I am amazed that the Jew, with his reputed eye for bargains, has overlooked it. Just think! For Ten Dollars a year one becomes a member of the Art Gallery, thereby not only supporting, but deriving the many benefits from that institution. The same nominal sum makes one a supporter of the Symphony and admits one to each of ten concerts, while it costs but five dollars to belong to and attend the five magnificent concerts of the world renowned Hart House Quartette; for Twenty-five Dollars one can join all three, thus raising oneself out of the narrow, ordinary, prosaic paths of life and likewise raising the prestige of the Jewish community to the plane of respected and helpful citizenship, which is today so sorely lacking.

"It is heartrending to me to go night after night to cultural events, without seeing a Jewish face. What must the cultured folk of Toronto think of the many wealthy Jews who fail to support either with their money or presence such worthy civic enterprises. Jews are permitted to belong to the Art Gallery and to play in the Symphony. Why shouldn't we give these institutions our whole hearted support? It is disgusting indeed when one looks over the subscribers' list of the Symphony Orchestra to find at most only a few Jewish names, while on that of the Hart House Quartette there are but two. If we want to be considered "nice people" we must be "nice." The world is full of brutalities and what greater relief is there than through the realm of the imagination stimulated through music, painting, literature, and art."

Thus concludes this astute critic as he urges us to preach a sermon on "Through Culture to Life" as a means of kindling within the hearts of our fellow Jews a craving for cultural pursuits. To all of which, we say "Amen." We too, ever since our arrival in Toronto, have been painfully amazed by the paucity of Jews who attend the very finest of concerts which are held so frequently in this richly cultural community. Even our non-Jewish fellow Jews—Ehrman, Heifetz, Lerner—fail to draw aught but grateful of our compliments to their magnificent concerts; to say nothing of our tragic indifferences to our local enterprises. We have burned

THE FATEFUL POSSIBILITIES

Our readers may have noticed that during the past few months, we have been devoting our editorial column almost exclusively to the subject of Zionism and the Palestine situation. The moment we pick up our pen to write for publication, our mind instantly leaps to the topic of the great national crisis which the Jewish people are now facing. No doubt we still have about us the plethora of problems and concerns which make up the texture of Jewish life. But somehow the majority of them seem to have lost their poignancy and appeal. There are the perennial anxieties about the state of our philanthropic institutions, our schools, our anti-Semitisms, our synagogues, and all the other interests that clutter up the scene. It is difficult however to work up a proper degree of emotional excitation about them when there is the great fact confronting us of the fateful turn of the road which our contemporary history has reached.

The Zionist movement at its inception was a revolutionary factor in our understanding of the significance of Jewish life. Its basic assumptions and conclusions involved a radical reinterpretation of the purport of our group existence. Prior to its advent, we had the philosophy of reform Judaism as the compass of our destiny. The Jewish mind had found itself in the predicament of having to overcome the dualism of habituated Jewish attitudes and the seductions of a rich, western culture. Reform Judaism by interpreting the Jewish mem in terms of religion and Jewish destiny in terms of mission, effected a fairly workable synthesis of Jewism and its environment. After a period of the ascendency of reform ideology, came Zionism and brought about a complete upheaval in our thoughts about the tendencies of Jewish history and the course we were to follow in the future. Zionism made us look upon the Jews as a nationality with the capacity of creating a distinctive culture. It taught us to envisage the future as a heightened stage of a process of national self-expression. And it also introduced an element of purposeful activism in our life: Thinking of ourselves as a nation, we were called upon to intensify the phases of our national being and to work for the creation of the normal conditions of national life. With the spread of the Zionist idea, the whole tone of our group life changed; a new set of values came to the fore and our entire configuration was altered. More recently the apparent success of the experiment in Palestine went a further way in the instatement of the Zionist idea as the central motif of Jewish life.

Well, Zionism has just now received a very serious check. Let us remember that though at the outset there were a number of brands of Zionism, during the past ten years, namely, since the Balfour Declaration, we have had only one species of Zionism political Zionism. Religious Zionism and socialist Zionism concerned themselves only with the coloring of the life which was to be created in Palestine under the political conditions contemplated by the Balfour Declaration and the mandate. Revisionism and Radical-Zionism qualified Zionism only in the sense that they insisted on a maximalist program of political Zionism. The old schools of "cultural Zionism" and "practical Zionism" offering alternatives to "political Zionism" had disappeared entirely from the scene. Political Zionism was coextensive with Zionism; it was identical with the latter.

The action of the Zionist leaders Weizmann, Melchett and Warburg —in resigning signifies this, that in their opinion there is now lacking a basis for cooperation between the Jewish people and the mandatory power

DO YOU KNOW

That the modern trend of improved cooking is increasingly toward the use of Cast Aluminum Waterless Method. This method of preparing fresh fruits, vegetables and meat without water, without the use of steam pressure and with a very low application of heat retains their natural elements and preserves the vitamines and mineral elements that are necessary for the prevention of disease. Food prepared without water by this method retains their natural flavors, tasting entirely different from foods steamed or boiled in water. The odor of foods cooked this way is not dispelled throughout the house. When cooking fruits the desire to preserve the best flavor possible and retain the natural elements is only natural and is only possible by this method and even two-thirds of the sugar ordinarily used. Meats prepared by the Sully method of Waterless Cooking on top of the stove, with a very low heat, no shrinkage are rendered tender, flavorous and nourishing. Every cook knows that the appetizing extractines will be wasted, the muscular fibres will be rendered tough and in short the meat will be unappetizing if cooked in water very long. Sully Cast Aluminum with complete Kitchen equipment of unusual Beauty and economic utility is a wholly Canadian product by a purely Canadian organization. They would welcome an opportunity to demonstrate the unusual merit and savings to you and your friends at any time without obligation to buy. COMMENTARIES

By Rabbi HARRY J. STERN, of Montreal,
Associate Contributing Editor

VICTORY! CONGRATULATIONS!

We are most happy to record that Jewish Federation scored a great victory in this year's appeal, even as it did in previous years. And credit is certainly due all the men and women who so valiantly and so generously served in the cause. It was a hard fight. It was a battle fought under all sorts of unfavorable conditions—economic and psychological. But the great army of Jewish Federation knew not defeat. Our congratulations to Jewish Montreal for upholding the great traditions of charity and loyalty. Thank God, the Spirit of Jewish Philanthropy still lives in our beloved city.

• • •

But our gratitude for Federation's success is also addressed to those of the non-Jewish community who gave most liberally. At no time in the history of Montreal Jewry have our Gentile friends responded so generously to the call of Jewish Federation. Indeed such giving illustrates concretely that charity spells humanity. It stretches beyond racial and creedal boundaries. May this spirit of Gentile-Jewish friendship and fellowship grow mightily with the onward march of years.

We are grieved to read that Rabbi Stephen S. Wise has, as yet, not regained his normal strength. For weeks now, this champion of Israel has been ill. As a result his genial and dynamic presence and his prophetic voice have been missed in the councils of Israel. And Israel is so sorely in need of him at this critical juncture of events. We breathe a prayer that Stephen Wise may speedily be restored in health and strength.

• • •

A SOUL CLINIC

These are trying days for many. Depression in business has made for mental depression and mind-poisoning. Healthy-mindedness can best be arrived at only thru' deep religious convictions. Perhaps every minister's study ought, especially in these cloudy days, to become a "soul clinic." The religious leader who possesses knowledge of modern psychology and combines this with religious truths can be of positive help to hundreds who have lost courage to carry on. The man who fears life must be addressed in the words of Norman Macleod:

"Courage, brother, do not stumble
Though the path be dark as night;
There's a star to guide the humble—
Trust in God and do the right."

WE HOPE IT COMES SOON!

Dr. Lee K. Frankel, one of the outstanding authorities in the realm of Philanthrophy, has recently prophesied that fifty years hence "charity campaigns", as we know them to-day, will not exist. The state will look after the incapacitated of society. The state thru' industrial insurance and old age pensions will protect the unfortunate ones. And what is more continues Dr. Frankel:

"Fifty years from to-day all the types of material assurance now dreamed of will be of industrial commonplace. The government, thru the impetus of competition with more socialistic countries, will find itself more and more deeply engaged in welfare work, thus relieving the charitable organizations of most of their duties. The social service worker will not vanish. Instead, half a century from now, social service will be a strong medium for the development of race consciousness. There will be very little need for economic relief, but there will always be present the need for spiritual sustenance."

We hope this vision of Mr. Frankel will speedily become a reality!

RETAINS MONEY IN ATTEMPTED HOLD-UP

When Miss Sarah Silverstein, 5438 Esplanade Avenue, walked out of the Banque Provinciale Monday she had with her $742 which she had just withdrawn. One of three men, all of whom had been in an auto, jumped out, struck her, knocked her down, and attempted to take the money.

Harry Pope, a messenger of the Bank of Toronto, and Sol. Satinstein, both of whom happened to be passing, gave chase to the thief while the two companions made their escape in a car. They caught the man, held him, and turned him over to the police.

The captured man refused to give his name or address; or to tell anything about himself.

RECEIVES DAMAGES FOR BLACK EYE

"No one likes to go in public with a black eye which may cause remarks and even suspicions more or less disagreeable," declared Mr. Justice de Lorimier in the Superior Court Monday in giving judgment in favor of Miss Fanny Applebaum. The black eye in question was acquired when the woman was thrown against a street car seat, when the car was struck from behind by another tram car.

For the damages suffered in the accident she was awarded $170 by the court, including $20 on account of the suffering and annoyance arising from her injury. In defence to the action the Montreal Tramways Company said that the eyes of the motorman were dazzled by the headlights of an approaching automobile.

"Not yet," she would return, studiedly matter-of-fact. She had determined to win a certain prize—a doll with a puffy face, yellow ringlets and dropsical ankles that, throning it on the counter like the goddess of this particular sacred grove, leered down upon the customers. All the bawdy cheapness of Savin Rock was somehow concentrated into that tinseled figure; the head unscrewed — a last fitting touch—and revealed a half-pound of stale and dusty chocolates. Molly loathed that doll; but she meant to have her——

"Ready, George!" she called out at last.

George, without a word, left the booth and plunged into the throng. She'd kept him dawdling about interminably; he intended to get his revenge now by racing her legs off. If she wanted to catch up with him, she'd have to hustle. He had not gone fifty feet, however, before she had slipped a hand through the crook of his arm and was breasting the human current with him. She was cool, collected, casual.

"Here—take this, George!" she commanded and held out her disreputable doll.

In a blank dismay, he stopped short. "Oh, my God!" he moaned in a ludicrous anguish. "Are you crazy?" He snatched the thing from her, stared for one moment into its strained coquettish eyes, then flung it into the street.

"I won't be made a laughing-stock —I won't!" he almost wailed.

Molly's mouth tightened and she pushed out her lower jaw. "All right—all right!" She quietly shrugged aside his puny tantrum.

The doll sprawled, flat on her back, in the road. Her head had come off and rolled into the gutter; it was training its professional, faintly gruesome smirk upon the summer constellations. Three scrubby little boys dodged out of the crowd, grabbled up the decapitated trunk and shook the chocolates out of it.

"We don't want to make a scene in public, of course," Molly remarked.

"Don't we?" he scoffed.

"Or do we?" she pondered aloud, turning her back on him and fighting a relentless way into the Carousel Pavilion.

George trailed along disgustedly at her heels. By now, a childish overblown pout filled out the curves of his mouth. He seemed to be butting with his forehead into the clamor, to be peering up through the black fringes of his eyebrows. Desperately he was attempting to convey scorn and dignity; but he registered only an owlish dread, the lugubrious helplessness of a creature blinded by the light. People pushed him, swore at him, tartly reminded him to look out where he was going. The last weak thrill induced by the roller-coaster had long since quivered out. He began to feel baited. His fighting blood surged in his ears and beat a little hammer in his brain. The virus of Savin Rock was working in him now.

He grabbed Molly roughly around the waist and thumped her down on a horse's back; then he climbed up on a glistening zebra and, crouched over guiltily, mumbled curses into the animal's ear.

The merry-go-round spun dizzily, like an immense and gaudy top. The shining slippery menagerie rocked backwards and forwards with a jog-trot monotony that quite belied the blood-lust in their red-rimmed eyes. The orchestrion ground out a brazen tune, to the accompaniment of clashing cymbals. The war-drum in George's head pulsed its rhythmic alarum. Molly, alert and resourceful, applied herself to the gathering in of the coveted brass rings.

Suddenly, George's swimming eyes had focused on a pink blotch in the distance, had steadied to a tense concentration and made out the rowdyish ringmaster of Shipley. Astride of a leopard, Shipley was grinning at him and putting a ribald thumb at Molly. George groaned; for him it was a moment of blighting shame. The whole stricken body seemed to have crashed with a derisive whoop into his guarded privacy.

The merry-go-round was slowing its revolutions. George jumped off his zebra, slipped and staggered along the sliding floor and dragged Molly from her mount.

"Look out there!" the guard called. "Wait till she stops, can't you!"

"Go to the devil!" George shouted back.

The flooring still flowed away under him, like a strong current of liquid varnish. He was being swept helplessly down the polished stream. He lost his frantic clutch of Molly; she whirled past him, her legs tangled, her feet tripping each other up as she struggled to cross the moving platform. At last, with a gasp of terror, she stumbled to the edge and dropped off. She had raced half the length of the room before she fetched up safely in the arms of the indignant guard. George, lifting his feet high in air, trod the fantastic mill, and endeavored to keep his training legs; but he leaned too far to one side and in a moment had been flung into space. The guard dodged him and he landed with a slam against the wall.

THE EAR

The ear-drum lies at the inner end of the canal which leads into the ear from the outside. This structure is a membrane of considerable strength. It acts as a drumhead, picking up sound waves and transmitting them to the ossicles, the three small bones which lie behind it in the middle ear.

In addition to acting as a drumhead, the ear-drum also serves as a barrier to keep out foreign substances. This is one reason why any break in the drum is serious as it exposes the middle ear to infection from without.

In order to hear, it is not absolutely necessary that the drum be intact. The extent to which any tear or hole in the drum may interfere with hearing depends upon the location and size of the injury.

Behind the ear-drum is the middle ear or tympanic cavity. Here are the ossicles, the three small bones forming a series of levers which pass to the internal ear the vibrations received by the ear-drum.

The Eustachian tube, which connects the midle ear with the throat, opens into the middle ear. This tube serves as a passage for air and thus keeps the pressure within the middle ear, on the inside of the drum, the same as the air pressure on the outside of the drum. This equality of pressure is important for proper hearing.

If the Eustachian tube becomes blocked through inflammation or other causes, air does not get in and hearing is interfered with. If there is infection of the nose or throat, it may spread to the Eustachian tube and there is grave danger that if the nose is blown too strenuously some infection will be forced up the tube and will cause disease of the middle ear. The nose should not be blown forcefully at any time, but to do so when the individual is suffering from a cold in the head is to invite trouble of a very serious nature. The mastoid cells which open into the middle ear have nothing to do with hearing. They are similar to the head sinuses which drain into the nose. They are important because, in so many cases, when there is infection of the middle ear, the infection spreads into the hollow cavities of the mastoid, the bony prominence situated behind the ear. When this occurs, we find a condition called mastoiditis, which is serious and requires immediate care.

Prevention of these conditions lies in giving attention to the nose and throat. Trouble in the middle ear usually means infection of the nose or throat. Diseased tonsils and adenoids are often responsible for abnormal ear conditions. Prompt and proper treatment of colds, measles and scarlet fever prevents the complication of middle ear disease. Earache should never be neglected or regarded as merely requiring home remedies; it calls for skilful attention if mastoid disease is to be prevented and hearing preserved. Correct blowing the nose, at all times, is fundamental in ear health.

Montreal Federation Campaign Objective Passed

The total subscriptions received at the final dinner of the workers in the $500,000 campaign on behalf of the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies amounted to $503,[illegible]. The objective, despite the hard times prevailing, was exceeded by over $3,500 which caused great jubilation among the campaigners at the dinner in the ball room of the Mount Royal Hotel Monday night, December 1. The money was raised as follows: Special gifts $[illegible]; trades and zones $[illegible]; women's Hebrews $[illegible]; ladies' garment workers $[illegible] and Amalgamated Union of Cap[illegible] Workers $2,000; small change $[illegible].

J. P. Lewis campaign chairman introduced the speakers Rev. Father McShane prominent in the recently organized Catholic Federation of Charities; Norman J. Dawes chairman of the board of directors of the Financial Federation; Norman Bolt and Sam Bronfman chairman of the publicity committee and Lillian Roth, movie picture actress.

Father McShane the chief speaker who was introduced by the chairman as one of the most notable characters in the City of Montreal, brought a message of goodwill in the name of the English-speaking Catholics. "There is the characteristic of the Jewish race which I have always admired—they stand out and are a power unto themselves," Father McShane remarked. "We are living in a city unique in the North American continent. There is a united interest among the various interests which makes as notable as the success obtained by the Jewish people in attaining their goal."

Mr. Dawes stated that the financial situation of Montreal was unprecedented in the history of the city. He congratulated the Federation on the fact that the campaign was completed a week before the time limit. Mr. Dawes said that the organization of the Federation had been effected at a time when the city was in the throes of the depression and that the campaign had been launched at practically the lowest ebb in the history of the city.

Norman Bolland who is a brother of the late Abraham Bolland, who was prominently identified with the Federation from its inception, was presented with a silver cup by Mr. Bronfman, in appreciation of the services rendered by his brother.

Mr. Bronfman stated that the success of the campaign was due to the fact that the workers had been organized on a basis of personal contact. He thanked the workers on behalf of the Federation and the beneficiaries of the campaign.

NEWS OF THE HEBREW UNIVERSITY

By Julietta R. Kahn

As a result of the $5,000 gift of David Shapiro, owner of the Jewish Day-Wahrheit of New York, the Yiddish collection at the Hebrew University Library has increased from 1000 in 1927 to over 7500 in 1930, according to a report by Dr. Hugo Bergmann, Director of the Library. The present collection includes bequests by the late Dr. Chaim Spivak, of Denver, and the large library of the late Dr. Joseph Hazanovitch, of Warsaw, which was classified by the Society of Friends of the Hebrew University of that city. The Society in Warsaw itself has made large gifts to the University.

Books written in other dialects used by Jews in various parts of the world have been collected by the University Library. Special attention has been given to the literature of the Sephardi Jews, written in Spanish with Hebrew characters. The Library has acquired 800 volumes in this dialect, which is still used among the descendants of Spanish Jews in the Near East.

In addition to the lists of desiderata prepared by the University from bibliographies in various Yiddish Dictionaries, book-sellers in Frankfurt and Amsterdam have recently sent the University valuable lists of old books from which the Library will make up new lists of books missing from the present collections. Owing to the increase in Yiddish books, the University librarians have succeeded in identifying anonymous authors and real names of such authors as write under a pseudonym, and in establishing one system of spelling writers' names, a difficult problem due to the change in Yiddish spelling introduced during the past fifteen years.

Among the most valuable contributions received by the Library is a gift from Emanuel Hertz, of New York, which includes many valuable studies on early Christianity and standard works on Palaeography and Archaeology. Mr. Hertz has already presented the University with hundreds of volumes through previous gifts, largely in Spanish.

L. Billig, Lecturer in Arabic Literature in the School of Oriental Studies of the University, is in Persia for the purpose of purchasing books for the Arabic Library which already contains the famous Goldziher Oriental Library of about 4000 books and pamphlets, acquired by the University in 1925 as the basis of the Oriental Collection used by scholars all over the East.

One Arab student has registered for work at the Hebrew University, according to the report from the Assistant Registrar, Dr. Ben-David. A large group of Polish students have also enrolled and one student gives his nationality as Canadian. The most popular course last semester was that in Hebrew Literature, given by Professor J. Klausner in which sixty students enrolled. Professor Klausner is a well-known Hebrew scholar, and is widely known in this country as the author of the much discussed book, "Life of Jesus".

When the Wailing Wall Commission was set up by the League of Nations in Jerusalem, Ahmet Zaki Pasha, a learned Arab scholar from Cairo, made use of the Arabic section of the University Library to prepare his report. In recognition of the permission of the University authorities to use the Arabic books and manuscripts, Ahmet Zaki Pasha sent the University his latest book, a history of one of the companions of Mohamet, Selman El-Farisi, with the following dedication:

> "I dedicate this book to the Library of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem remembering the cooperation which the Library gave to me, in order to find the sources for proving the rights of Islam with regard to the Holy Aqsa Mosque."

The Library, which is open to all without distinction of race or creed, has recently been used by a number of Christian scholars, notably scholars interested in interpretation of the Bible who have consulted Mr. E. Ha-Reubeni, Special Assistant in Biblical Botany, regarding identification of plant names mentioned in the Bible.

Dr. Ha-Reubeni and Mrs. Ha-Reubeni have presented their botanical collection to the University as a nucleus of a museum of the plants of ancient Jewish literature and Arab plant-lore. Dr. Ha-Reubeni visited several Arab villages near Tel Aviv within the past month to compare and supplement the stock of legends and tales connected with plant lore. He met with a friendly reception everywhere, according to the report.

Legislation for protection of wild plants is being enacted with the cooperation of the Government authorities and the Institute of Palestine Natural History. A. Eig, Custodian of the Palestine Herbarium, has been asked by the Government Department of Forestry to study protection of plants by law in Europe. Mr. Eig is proceeding to Europe in connection with the English edition of the Handbook of Palestine Flora which has just appeared in Hebrew under the imprint of the University Press Association. The Department of Forestry of Palestine is also cooperating in regard to various plants of the Warburg Grove and has sent several plants hitherto unknown in Palestine to the University Department of Botany for identification.

Teachers in Jewish elementary and secondary schools in science will consult Mr. Eig and Ha-Reubeni on questions concerned with their departments. Definite steps have been taken through conferences to promote closer relations with the University Department.

Travel Now a Real Pleasure

Looking at England

This royal throne of kings, this sceptered isle,
This earth of majesty, this seat of Mars,
This other Eden, demi-Paradise,
This fortress built by nature for herself,
Against infection, and the hand of war;
This happy breed of men, this little world;
This precious stone set in a silver sea,
Which serves it in the office of a wall,
Or as a moat defensive to a house,
Against the envy of less happier lands;
This blessed plot, this earth, this realm, this England.
King Richard II Act II Sc. I.

The above quotation is one of the most moving descriptions of England ever written. Shakespeare, was inspired with a fervid love of his country and some of his greatest work is concerned with her glories. A visit to England is essential if one is to grasp the feeling that animated Shakespeare, and if that visit is made in the proper spirit the feeling is unmistakable. Then too, a view of England is necessary, if one is to gain an adequate conception of history. The history of England itself, of Canada, and even of the United States. This last is not always realized, but it must be remembered that the older parts at least, of the Constitution of the United States, are based on the great unwritten British Constitution, and that American jurisprudence derives, as does our own code, from the laws of England the Great, from Magna Charta and the Bill of Rights. Canadians, even more than Americans, should take an interest in England, for she is in a very real sense, the Mother country.

No Canadian need not feel that he is visiting a foreign land when he goes to England. We should feel at home there, for a common origin, common speech, and common laws, is a bond not easily overlooked. There are some differences of habit and custom between us the majority of visitors find English ways very pleasing—such as the cup of tea brought to the bedside in early morning, and the convenience of having one's shoes polished by leaving them outside the door of one's room on retiring. The cup of tea in the afternoon, often tried, is hard to give up—although the business man from this side of the water is rather apt to take it—at first.

We shall not go into details in describing England. That is a task for the Speaker and his Travel Talk to include. It would be well—and it is essential if one is to get a great sense of time—to have a basic information before leaving this side. We would suggest even, mapping out in an itinerary—to be followed slavishly, but as a guide for observation. This should be done to permit one to view the greatest possible diversity of English scenery. For there is as much difference between the lea and valleys of Devon, and the Downs of Sussex, as there is between the Eastern Townships and the Laurentians; as great a contrast between the hunting Shires and the fells of Cumberland and Yorkshire, as between the Western Provinces and Northern Ontario.

All the ordinary modes of travel are available to the traveller in England. The trains are rapid, smooth running, and the third class coaches are both comfortable and economical. Locomotive buffs learn can at good stands near magnificent trains, and offer an inexpensive and flexible means of seeing the country. The best way of all to see England is to take a private motor car; and if three or four persons combine their resources, it need not be too costly a method.

If you are going to be some time in England, we would suggest the purchase outright of a car, under a guarantee of re-purchase. This can be arranged through your Travel Agent here, so that on your arrival in England, you find your car waiting on the quay, with licenses and Membership in the Automobile Association, or the Royal Automobile Club, all complete. If this has not agreed to you may rent a car on the Continent plan, or hire one complete with chauffeur.

The cost of a tour of England depends entirely on the method of travel, and the amount paid for a day, if any. Travelling by motor car, and stopping at the inn proprietors hotels, the whole affair can be managed at a cost not to exceed $7.00 to $8.00 per day, including all expenses. Travel from main to main or place to place of interest are to be avoided, but one of these two recalling together could make even these figures.

The ideal way to travel in England is by private car, and a car passenger includes can be had at a cost per day of $2.00, including a chauffeur and his board and lodging. For two passengers this means an expenditure of $3.00 per day each, and individual expenses should not exceed or more than another $1.00 or $2.00 per day. This makes a total of around $30.00 per day which is not an excessive figure for to and transportation and accommodation throughout. The main highways of England are excellent, and a recent amendment to the Motor Vehicles Act has established a fixed speed limit. It should be borne in mind that driving in the common danger no matter at what rate of speed will meet with swift punishment. There are several arterial highways which lead from one to important points but unless you are really pressed for time we should not advise following them. They have been driven through the country in the most direct line possible, and one sees little of typical England from them. As a matter of fact, the secondary roads are often preferable to the first class highways as they are well surfaced as a rule and much less travelled, and one is more likely to see the unspoiled country-side from them. A good road map is a necessity of course.

Though a small country—a small island, that one is never more than about eighty miles from the sea—the scenery of England is extremely varied. It is indeed difficult to say what part of England is the most beautiful. There are some who would say that the Lake District of Westmorland and Cumberland takes the palm, others would maintain the claims of Devon, still others would mention the beauty of Kent—the Garden of England. From the Dales of Lincolnshire and the Norfolk Broads some can find their own peculiar attractions. And if the scenery is varied, so are the people. It must be remembered that England has been overrun by successive hordes of invaders; and the mark of the Saxon is still plain in the South and West; while the Danish type is prominent in the North and East. Indeed, one might say truthfully, that there is a greater difference between a yeoman of Devon and a Dalesman of Yorkshire, than there is between an average Canadian and an Australian. There is certainly a much greater difference in their speech, so that the Yorkshireman would be nearly unintelligible to the Devonian, and both would puzzle a Londoner or Liverpudlian to understand them. It is said that due to the activities of the British Broadcasting Company, these local dialects are in process of disappearing, which seems a pity.

Just as scenery and people differ, so does the general character of the country. England might be described as being Industrial, Agricultural, or Commercial. The Industrial is represented by Lancashire and part of Yorkshire and such cities as Manchester, Birmingham, Leeds, Sheffield, Huddersfield, and many others combine with the collieries to give this part of England its name of the Black Country. Agriculture in England, as elsewhere, is in a most depressed condition, but we have every faith that it will rise again. In the meantime, grazing is popular, as it has ever been, and English home grown cycle and sheep certainly make the best beef and mutton in the world. The commercial life of England is of course kept best in the great cities of London and Liverpool, although many smaller places contribute in no small degree to the life of trade. There might be added a fourth, as the marine and pleasure for a large part of the population constitute its living in or on the sea.

Although England has suffered invasion in years gone by, yet unlike the continental countries, she has not suffered from them, to the extent that she might have done. Armies have invaded France, Germany, or Italy, and have passed on or retired, leaving destruction in their wakes. In marked contrast, every invader of England, with the exception of the Romans, has settled down and remained in England, and no man will wantonly destroy that which he may need in the future. The result is that England is particularly rich in historical monuments, ranging from the possibly Neolithic remains at Stonehenge and Avebury, through the Roman cities of Bath and Silchester, the Saxon speculations at Winchester the capital of the Heptarchy, the Norman piles of London, Rochester or Durham, to those noble examples of English Gothic such as Salisbury in Exeter; and the magnificent Tudor of Audley End or the chessel buildings of Sir Christopher Wren of later times.

It is our purpose to suggest an itinerary for a tour of England that will permit a visitor to see all the best of the country. If this outline is followed, it can begin at London itself, Southampton, Liverpool, or, by a very slight alteration at Plymouth all of these ports of disembarkation for visitors from this side. A reference to the map while reading this will show that only in a couple of unimportant instances is a road traversed twice, and then for a few miles only. For our purpose now, we shall suppose that our party of Canadians has landed at Liverpool, and that their car and driver are awaiting them on the quay.

Liverpool itself was recommend. The Adelphi Hotel is a comparatively modern city, and is first noted in the reign of King John. It did not

TRAVEL NOW A GREAT PLEASURE

York to Fountains Abbey, mentioned above, and the trip is eminently worth while. Three or four days can profitably be spent in York, as one recaptures the mediaeval atmosphere better probably there than in any other city in England.

On leaving York, we continue South, reaching Lancaster after a 35 mile drive. The famous St. Leger, established in 1776 is run on the course on the Town Moor, every September; the records of the track extend back to 1615. From Lancaster we bear a little Eastward, and turn on through Bentley and East Retford to Gainsborough, and if we time our arrival properly we may see a very fine bore or tidal wave on the Trent—locally known as the "eager". At Gainsborough we leave the main way and follow a secondary road up the valley of Trent through the quaint villages of Lea, Marton, Laneham, Nook, Saxilby, and so arrive at Lincoln.

Lincoln is another very ancient city, and was an important centre under Roman rule. Ermine Street, and Fosse Way intersect. The Minster is one of the very few left in England with towers of a kind as one may see in the towers of London Bridge in Elizabethan times. There are a considerable number of houses in the town dating back to Norman days, and the castle of Lincoln, as of so many other English cities, is the Cathedral. It is remarkably situated and in a fine state of preservation. From the raised glacis of the castle views of the north-west terraces of cathedral are very beautiful. The Castle was formerly a royal residence and was founded by the Conqueror. There are also some Roman remains. The interior of the Castle may be explored in detail in the City and County Museum.

After a pleasant couple of days in Lincoln (the White Hart is a good hotel), we take the road again for Oxford. Passing a round about course, we swing over into the Midlands in order to look at the Kenilworth and Shakespeare country. The first town we come to is Newark, where King John died in 1216; then comes Nottingham, famous for its laces and hosiery. There is nothing to detain us in Nottingham, so we turn South again through Loughborough, also devoted to hosiery, and finally reach Leicester. This interesting old town has a history commencing with the Roman occupation also; but its chief claim to fame is that it gave a title to Simon de Montfort, the father of our English Parliamentary system. There are a good many Roman and Norman remains and even some Saxon features to be seen. At Leicester Abbey in Abbey Park, of which the ruins only remain, Cardinal Archbishop Wolsey breathed his last.

From Leicester we drive on through Nuneaton to Coventry (mentioned in Domesday Book and actually much older than that. It is now given up almost entirely to the manufacture of motors and cycles. Formerly was the scene of Lady Godiva's famous ride. As a matter of fact, the legend seems to be a slave imitation to the memory of Earl Leofric, her husband, who seems by all accounts to have been a good and a just man. Kingsley's Hereward does a better idea of him. A few miles out of Coventry we come to Kenilworth, with the Castle immortalized in Scott's novel. It is a noble pile, and well worth inspection. Next we come to the town of Warwick, chief town of the county of the same name, and here we may say that we have entered the Shakespeare country. The Church of St. Mary and Warwick Castle are the chief items of the town, as one might say, and both are rich in reminders of the King Maker, and the rest of the Beauchamps. At Stratford-on-Avon we shall say only that it has many interesting features apart from its connection with the Bard. Visitors from this side can be proud to see nothing but Shakespeare memorials in and around Stratford.

Leaving Stratford we come to Banbury, so noted Mistress Quickly's cross-ride rides in the nursery rhyme. It is famous for its cakes and ale, some of which may be sampled at the Red Lion. A few miles further on we come to Wood-stock, [illegible] Queen Elizabeth [illegible] Blenheim Palace, the seat of the Dukes of Marlborough, descendants of [illegible] Anne's great commander.
